

Print Pondering

Something to think about while you're waiting on your print job.

Just the Facts

- Bananas are the most purchased fruit in the US, with 84% of households purchasing them weekly.
- Potatoes are the most purchased vegetables in the US, with 85% of households purchasing them weekly.
- The five top fast food places for customer satisfaction are Chick-fil-a, Jimmy Johns, KFC, Papa Johns, and Dominos.
- The bottom five fast food places based on customer satisfaction are Wendy's, Jack in the Box, Sonic, Taco Bell, and McDonald's.
- Glacier National Park is the number one place to visit in the US and Paris is the number one place in the world.

Digital or Print?

"Our students are digital natives" is a term we have heard for years. But statistics indicate that it's not just our students who gravitate to digital resources. In fact, many have predicted the demise of print media. As an author, I love holding my books in my hand. However, as a reader, I appreciate the convenience of a Kindle. Over the break, I read several articles about the difference in reading comprehension between print and digital content. Research now says that print is the way to go for comprehension. Would you agree? It's something to think about.

National Holidays

Interesting fact - there are no national holidays in the United States. That's right, there are federal holidays (eleven of them), but no national holidays. Congress only has the authority to create holidays for federal institutions. Then there are the hallmark holidays ~ like Valentine's Day, St. Patrick's Day, Mother's Day, Father's Day, and Halloween ~ that we celebrate but we don't necessarily get the day off. If you could create a new holiday, what would it be? When would it be? How would we celebrate it? If you need ideas, there is a calendar of all the crazy things people have come up with. Check out nationaldaycalendar.com for things to celebrate every day.

